Forensic psychiatry is a subspecialty of psychiatry and is related to criminology. It encompasses the interface between law and psychiatry. According to the American Academy of Psychiatry and the Law, it's defined as "a subspecialty of psychiatry in which scientific and clinical expertise is applied in legal surroundings involving civil, felonious, corrective, non-supervisory, or legislative matters, and in technical clinical consultations in areas similar as threat assessment or employment. A forensic psychiatrist provides services – similar as determination of faculty to stand trial – to a court of law to grease the adjudicative process and give treatment, similar as specifics and psychotherapy, to culprits.

Faculty to stand trial (CST) is the faculty evaluation to determine that defendants have the internal capacity to understand the charges and help their attorneys [1]. In the United States, this is seated in the Fifth Amendment to the United States Constitution, which ensures the right to be present at one's trial, to face one's appellants, and to have help from an attorney. CST, occasionally appertained to as adjudicative faculty, serves three purposes" is conserving the quality of the felonious process, reducing the threat of incorrect persuasions, and guarding
